

INTRODUCTION

This unit focuses on the lived experiences of Americans during the Great Depression and the New Deal. Countering the common myth that the stock market crash of 1929 caused the Depression, this unit examines critical social and economic conditions in place prior to the crash. It explores how life during the Great Depression put enormous strains on traditional values and beliefs, which in turn gave rise to shifting and competing conceptions of the federal government's most appropriate role in people's lives. The activities within this unit ask participants to interpret this period: Using primary documents, participants will discover multiple perspectives of people who lived during the Great Depression.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

In this session, teachers will

- analyze and consider the historical significance of particular primary documents from the Great Depression that reveal how individual Americans experienced the Depression and the New Deal;
- discuss a number of examples of how a shift in popular attitudes questioned the rise of American individualism and a purely market-based economy, creating a community atmosphere best reflected in popular culture;
- consider the ways in which the New Deal—and later World War II—fundamentally changed the relationship between the American people and the federal government.

Before You Begin

Before the day of the workshop session, familiarize yourself with the reading materials assigned to the participating teachers. Review this facilitator's guide. Be sure to prepare the correct number of overheads and handouts needed for each activity. Each participant should read the text materials for the unit before attending the workshop (estimated reading time: two hours), and should bring these materials with them to the workshop session. Activities during the session will draw heavily on the content in the text materials, as well as the video.

MATERIALS NEEDED

- This America's History in the Making facilitator's guide
- Text Materials for Unit 18: By the People, For the People
- VHS tape and VCR, DVD and DVD player, or access to streaming video of America's History in the Making video for Unit 18: By the People, For the People available at www.learner.org

- Overhead projector
- Multiple copies of handouts (in the Appendix of this guide)
- Pens and paper for participating teachers and facilitator
- Chalkboard, blank transparencies, or overhead for reporting out

OVERHEAD AND HANDOUT INSTRUCTIONS

1. Using Appendix A, “Themes for By the People, For the People,” create an overhead transparency.
2. Using Appendix B, “Dorothea Lange Photographs,” create handouts of each photograph – enough for each participant to receive one from the assortment.
3. Using Appendix C, “Photo Analysis Worksheet” create one handout for each participant.
4. Using Appendix D, “Photo Fact Sheet,” create an overhead transparency.
5. Using Appendix E, “Letters to the Roosevelts Packet,” create one copy for each participant.
6. Using Appendix F, “Depression Quotes and Discussion Questions,” create one handout for each group of four or five participants.
7. Using Appendix G, “Virtual War Games Questions,” create an overhead transparency.
8. Using Appendix H, “Content Knowledge Assessment Scoring Guide,” create an overhead transparency.

Facilitator’s Note: You may want to prepare overheads of the reflection questions for teachers to reference during the workshop activities.

LEADING THE SESSION

As participating teachers arrive, have an overhead set up that lists the main themes of the unit for teachers to review (Appendix A).

After you have completed any housekeeping announcements, ask one of the teachers to read the themes aloud. Explain that they will expand their understanding of these three themes through activities and video segments that build on the reading they did prior to the workshop session.

Warm-up and Activity 1 (40 minutes)

This activity serves as an icebreaker for the group and explores the value of using photographs to inform our understanding of history. To complete this activity, participants will examine a photograph that has come to symbolize the U.S. Depression of the 1930s and the series of shots that led to this masterwork.

Part 1 (10 minutes)

As a group, brainstorm all of the ways in which your lives are directly impacted by the federal government. Then as a group, discuss the following questions:

- How have these changed, if at all, over the course of your lifetime?
- When did the federal government first begin directly impacting individuals' lives in this way?

Part 2 (10 minutes)

Have participants work individually at first. Randomly disperse the photographs from Dorothea Lange's Migrant Mother companion series to participants (Appendix B), and have them fill out the Photo Analysis Worksheet (Appendix C) in response to the individual photo each receives.

Part 3 (10 minutes)

Have participants get into groups of three (each participant with a different photo selection from the series) and share their responses to the questions on the worksheet, contrasting how the photos differ based on the various compositions.

Part 4 (10 minutes)

Place the photo fact sheet (Appendix D) on the overhead, and have a participant read it out loud. Then, have participants discuss the following reflection questions as a whole group.

Reflection Questions

1. Does the fact that companion photographs comprise a series leading, ultimately, to Migrant Mother impact how we react to that single image? Why? How?
2. Do posed photographs have the same historical value as photographs that are not posed? Why or why not?
3. Would we react to the images the same way if they were in color?
4. What makes Migrant Mother such an enduring symbol of the Depression? Why do you think the image is commonly perceived as a candid, unposed photo?

Watch Video Segment 1:
Historical Perspectives (approximately 10 minutes)

Activity 2 (30 minutes)

In this activity, participants will read and analyze letters that citizens wrote to the Roosevelts during the Depression.

Part 1 (20 minutes)

Hand out a copy of the “Letters to the Roosevelts Packet” (Appendix E) to each participant. Have the participants read the letters. As they read, they should consider the nature of the federal government’s impact on how people experienced the Depression. Then, have participants divide into pairs to generate responses to the questions on the final page of the packet (also listed below for facilitator reference).

- What do these letters reveal about the political, economic, and social factors in the communities where their writers lived?
- What evidence from these letters suggests that structural problems in society, beyond the stock market crash, created and maintained the Depression?
- Why did people write letters like this to the president and first lady? What do these letters reveal about the relationship between the Roosevelts and the American people?

Part 2 (10 minutes)

Have the participants individually develop ideas for how they might use these letters in their classrooms to teach students about the Depression. As time permits, have participants share their ideas as a whole group.

Watch Video Segment 2:
Faces of America (approximately 10 minutes)

Activity 3 (15 minutes)

In small groups, participants will discuss the beliefs of Ann Marie Lowe, Will Rogers, and Henry Ford, and understand how their beliefs were challenged during the Depression.

Have participants divide into groups of four or five. Distribute one copy of Appendix F, “Depression Quotes and Discussion Questions,” to each group. Read the first sentence (italicized below) out loud. Then, have one participant in each group read the first bulleted passage on the handout aloud, another person read the second bulleted passage aloud, and a third person read the third bulleted passage aloud. Have the small groups consider the discussion questions together.

Ann Marie Lowe, Will Rogers, and Henry Ford each faced moments when they had serious reservations about the changes the country was experiencing during the Depression.

Discussion Questions:

1. Why did each of these three individuals have such reservations about the changes the country was experiencing?
2. In what ways were their beliefs about how the federal government should respond to the Depression similar, and in what ways were they different?
3. In what ways does the life of each illuminate larger societal beliefs held during and since the Depression?

Watch Video Segment 3: Hands on History

(approximately 5 minutes to the end of the tape)

Activity 4 (20 minutes)

In this activity, participants will consider the relevance and impact of virtual war games on the teaching of history.

Place the following questions on the overhead (Appendix G). As a whole group, discuss these questions in relation to the video:

1. Do virtual war games necessarily glorify war? In what ways are virtual war games similar to and different from movies that might be used in the classroom?
2. How is “ensuring historical accuracy” different from teaching history?
3. What are the merits and limitations of using such technology in teaching history?

Activity 5 (15 minutes)

This unit began with an in-depth look at a series of photographs that led to the publication of Migrant Mother. This allowed for participants to consider together the effect of images on our understanding of history (in this case, American history during the Great Depression and the New Deal legislation). Following the Historical Perspectives video, participants read and analyzed letters written to the Roosevelts from citizens who were suffering during the Depression. Participants further understood the human plight during this time by discussing the reservations that Ann Marie Lowe, Will Rogers, and Henry Ford each about the changes the country was experiencing during the Depression.

This final activity serves as a conclusion to this session of the workshop. It provides participants an opportunity to reflect on what they have learned from the text and the workshop activities. This activity also reviews the Scoring Guide, which participants will use to assess their understanding of the content and historical thinking skills learned in this unit.

In previous activities, participants worked either in small groups or with the full group to complete the activities. For this activity, participants should work alone to reflect on what they've learned and then write their answers on paper (or type them on a computer). This final activity also models the type of assessment that the participants will be required to take to receive credit for the course.

Direct them with the following statements:

1. Select one of the letters to the Roosevelts in Appendix E. Analyze and put in writing how this letter helps you explore the theme: "The New Deal and World War II fundamentally changed the relationship between the people and the federal government."
2. On the same page, describe what historical thinking skills you used in your analysis. What specific aspects of the artifact helped you understand the theme better?

As a whole group, look at the criteria for full credit on the Content Knowledge Assessment Scoring Guide (Appendix H). Ask participants to review what they wrote and share the types of answers that they believe will result in a score of 3 or 4.

Appendix A: Themes for By the People, For the People

THEME 1

Coming out of an unprecedented period of prosperity, the Great Depression revealed structural problems with the economy—pointing to the need for government regulation, and calling into question the viability of democracy and capitalism.

THEME 2

A shift in popular attitudes questioned the rise of American individualism and a purely market-based economy, creating a community atmosphere that was reflected in popular culture.

THEME 3

The New Deal and World War II fundamentally changed the relationship between the people and the federal government.

1. Study the photograph to form an overall impression, and then examine the individual details of the image. Divide the photograph into quadrants and re-examine each section to see if new details become visible.
2. In the chart below, list the people, objects, and activities in the photograph.

People	Objects	Activities

3. Based on your observations above, list three inferences you might make from the photograph.

4. What questions does this photograph raise in your mind?

5. Where could you go to find the answers to your questions?

When Dorothea Lange wrote an article on the photo Migrant Mother in 1960, even her own memory of events had been fogged by the intervening 26 years. She recalled having spent ten minutes on a series of five photographs, each taken progressively closer to the subject. Actually, six photos comprise the series—five companion photos and the final photo which became Migrant Mother—several of which appear to involve significant staging.

Lange’s considerable experience as a studio photographer enabled her to make judgments in composition and blocking that ultimately evoked more emotion from her subject than the earlier, more candid pictures in the series. The teenage daughter is removed from the composition, one of seven children of the initially anonymous 32-year-old Florence Thompson, for fear that Lange’s audience, largely middle class, would be less than sympathetic to the subject’s lack of family planning during difficult times.

One of the two youngest children is brought back into the frame after an unsatisfactory snap of the mother and infant nursing. The empty pie tin and trunk attest to the neediness and transitory nature of the family’s condition. Compositionally speaking, this fifth photo may be the strongest of the series.

To get more emotion from the primary subject, Lange moved even closer and had the two younger children turn their faces away from the camera. Lange had Thompson put her hand to her face—an old photographer’s trick—to call attention to her emotions. By the time Lange exhibited Migrant Mother at the Museum of Modern Art in 1941, a darkroom assistant had removed the distracting thumb on the tent post which Thompson had used to steady herself.

Dorothea Lange’s masterwork from the pea fields of Nipomo, California in February of 1936 has become arguably the most enduring photograph of the Depression from among the 160,000 pictures taken by Farm Security Administration photographers. Government regulations required FSA photographers to turn in all photographs from an assignment. In what ways do lesser-known companion images add to the historical record? Do they lessen the achievement of the photographer?

[Port Henry, N.Y.]

March 18, 1935

[Dear Mrs. Roosevelt:]

I have been reading the papers about what is going on at Washington. It is a pity those Senators do not seem to understand how serious the condition of this Country is and why does President Roosevelt want all this Money to give to people who have plenty by not giving the working people a living wage. You know the depression has lasted to long. And the people in charge of the Relief want it to last at least for two years more. The Relief is the worst scandal in the history of this country. I can not see why President Roosevelt can not see it is only food for the 1936 campaign for all in charge of the relief are republicans and they will not do what is right, by starving the people they think they can make them vote the way they want them to vote. The poor people are not getting this money...

Philadelphia Pa.

Feb'y 19, 1935.

Dear Mrs Roosevelt:

After Seeing So many of your pictures in Magazines and papers, and seeing that you always look so well dressed, a thought came to me that you may have a few old discarded dresses among the ones that you have tired of that you would like to get rid of, and do some one good at the same time. I have waited and waited for work until every thing I had is about finished. I can sew and would only be too glad to take two old things and put them to gether and make a new one. I don't care what it is, any thing from an old bunch of stockings to an old Sport Suit or an old afternoon dress, in fact. Any-thing a lady 40 years of age can wear. I will await an eager reply.

Thanking you in advance.

Letters to the Roosevelts Questions

- What do these letters reveal about the political, economic, and social factors in the communities where their writers lived?
- What evidence from these letters suggests that structural problems in society, beyond the stock market crash, created and maintained the Depression?
- Why did people write letters like this to the president and first lady? What do these letters reveal about the relationship between the Roosevelts and the American people?

Appendix F: Depression Quotes & Discussion Questions

Ann Marie Lowe, Will Rogers, and Henry Ford each faced moments when they had serious reservations about the changes the country was experiencing during the Depression.

- Ann Marie Lowe said: “I don’t love this country the way I used to. It’s not as beautiful to me anymore since the changes that the government made.”
- Will Rogers was very interested in socialism and events in the Soviet Union: “Ten men in our country could buy the world, and ten million can’t buy enough to eat. So the salvation of all might come out of these Cuckoo Russians...So we ain’t going to get nowhere cussing ’em. We better watch ’em, and they got anything good, why cop onto it, and maybe we can feed everybody.”
- Henry Ford was staunchly opposed to unions. He argued: “Labor unions are the worst thing that ever struck the earth because they take away a man’s independence.” When the United Auto Workers finally organized Ford employees in 1941, Ford considered shutting down rather than signing the union contract.

Discussion Questions:

1. Why did each of these three individuals have such reservations about the changes the country was experiencing?
2. In what ways were their beliefs about how the federal government should respond to the Depression similar, and in what ways were they different?
3. In what ways does the life of each illuminate larger societal beliefs held during and since the Depression?

Appendix G: Virtual War Games Questions

1. Do virtual war games necessarily glorify war? In what ways are virtual war games similar to and different from movies that might be used in the classroom?
2. How is “ensuring historical accuracy” different from teaching history?
4. What are the merits and limitations of using such technology in teaching history?
