Dear Editor

I found an article on The Boston Channel.com. The story was called, "Minivan Blind Sports Put Kids in Danger", reported by Heather Unruh. The people who make SUV minivans shouldn't make them anymore because it's too dangerous to children. The woman in the car should've at least got out and see who was behind it before driving. It was bad enough that she reverse the car and kill her daughter, but went forward and ran over her the second time, that was just stupid. Parents should put their children in a safe place before driving out the driveway.
