

Bibliography of Research Articles

The following articles were selected by JoEllen Ambrose and distributed as a research packet to her students in connection with this lesson. The packet included articles from both local and national newspapers as well as some text material. The sources were primarily identified through an Internet search that she conducted. Most are one to two pages in length. Depending on your goals for this lesson, you might recreate this research package, conduct a new Internet search that would yield more current articles and/or those that represent your local communities, or assign students to do the research on their own.

Chanen, David. "Data deepens racial-profiling divide," Star Tribune, January 21, 2001.

Eden, Abigail and Iyad Fattom. "Is racial profiling justified?" The New York Times Upfront Magazine, p. 32, no date.

Browning, Dan. "Testing police strategy and claims of racial profiling," Star Tribune, July 23, 2000.

_____ "What racial profiling means," Star Tribune, July 23, 2000.

Johnson, Thomas L. and Cheryl Widder Heilman. "Racial Disparity in the Criminal Justice System," Bench & Bar, May/June 2001, pp. 29-35.

Jones, Todd. "Racial Profiling," in The Eagle, a newsletter published by the U.S. Attorney's Office, No. 20, Spring 2000.

Locy, Toni and Kevin Johnson. "More Middle Eastern men face inquiries," USA Today, March 21, 2002.

"Public Views on Racial Profiling After September 11" Data from Los Angeles Times poll conducted September 13-14, 2001, and NPR News, Kaiser Family Foundation, and Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government polls conducted November 12, 2001.

"The Limits of Police Authority: Racial Profiling," from Chapter 7 in Criminal Justice in America, Third Edition, 2000.

Walsh, James and Dan Browning. "Presumed guilty until proved innocent," Star Tribune, July 23, 2000.

Will, George F. "Exposing the 'Myth' of Racial Profiling," The Washington Post, April 19, 2001.

Source: Jo Ellen Ambrose, social studies teacher, Champlin Park High School, Champlin, Minnesota